Mandelaz Recycling Efforts End In Tragedy

The law school suffered a severe shock yesterday as its fearful leader and all-around cool guy Brine Mandelaz was found crushed under a stack of Law School Council memos in front of the Harkness Commons student mailboxes.

"It was truly a freak accident," said cool-guy-elect George Hangnail, describing the bizarre circumstances surrounding Mandelaz's ill-fated box stuffing efforts. "And that's aside from the fact that Brine was a freak," he said.

Mandelaz was found by the really, really, big fat Harvard police officer (you know the one) lying below a pile of 15,000 memorandums, which were apparently to be stuffed into students' boxes.

The memos urged student organizations to save paper by printing all documents on white, recyclable paper. The memos were printed on psychedelic purple paper to provide students with an example of how wasteful some organizations were, as well as to show that Brine was not as boring as his wardrobe. Hangnail said.

Each of the documents was marked "DRAFT" in dark print in the upper right hand corner. Although the distinctive Mandelaz trademark was also stamped, apparently accidentally, on the upper right hand corner of Mandelaz's forehead, detectives studying the case dismissed the suggestion of foul play. "Nobody, not even those pompous resume-padding sycophants at HLS Today could have hated him that much, except maybe Fenno," a fat police spokeswhale said, on the condition of unanimity.

The recently-formed college organization, the Society of Nerds and Geeks (SONG), renamed itself as the "BMs" in honor of Mandelaz's "regular and solid" devotion to student concerns. Faculty, students and local babes alike mourned the loss.

Worldwide World Tree Search

The famous World Tree, which has graced the HLS campus since Fenno was a pup, was reported stolen from Jarvis Yard last Friday night. Detective Christopher LaDumbo of the HU Police speculated early Saturday that the priceless objet d'art would probably vanish under ground or into a private collection without a ransom demand.

"It [the World Tree] could be anywhere by now," stated LaDumbo. "It could be in Rome or Paris or France, or even a student's dorm room."

Rocky Forgerlone, Manager of Building Operations and unofficial curator of the HLS art collection, expressed shock at the theft, in light of the extremely heavy security in the HLS campus area following an attempt last year by an unknown person to steal a bagel from the Harkbox Cafe during the morning rush. "You know, it's a madhouse in there between 8:45 and 9:00."

LaDumbo responded to Forgerlone's comments by noting that "we would have put out an APB [for the snack thief], but we sent our secretary out to get us coffee. She's the only one who knows how to work the teletype machine."

According to LaDumbo, the beefed-up security in the HLS campus area included two guards — "a really, really big fat guy, and someone else." Additionally, he noted that the hundreds of mounds of dog excrement in the area of Jarvis Yard "serve as sensitive motion detectors — better than some of that high-tech infrared laser s—t. Not only do troublemakers stay away, those that are dumb enough to try something are easy to track."

When questioned about the failure of the heightened protective measures to thwart the theft of the World Tree, LaDumbo stated that both security guards were apparently attempting to

Clark Must Testify At Watkins Trial; Tapes Show Ginsburg Huffing Doobies With Marion Barry

The unusually calm trial of accused rapist, buffoon and hypnotist Kevin Watkins, No-L, took a stunning turn when judge ordered Dean Boob Clark to testify regarding his involvement in the seamy affair.

The judge, however, granted the request of Clark's attorney, Alan Scurlwhiz, that the Dean be allowed to submit videotaped testimony.

"As long as it's not unauthorized nude videotaping," Clark said. "Only I could authorize such a thing, but of course I've never been nude, except in front of Derek 'Biscuit Pants' Bok. And no, my son is not a skinhead, dammit. He's just got an all-American crewcut. If Ron Fox had a crewcut and shaved his beard..."

Clark has offered little public comment on the Watkins incident since he kicked the Society for Black and Blue Entrepreneurs (SBBE) president out on his deaf ear. "All I really remember is that he had a bad attitude," Clark stated. "Oh yeah, he had bad breath, and he spit on me when he talked, too."

Clark denied that he unfairly ejected Watkins from school; in fact, he denied ejecting him at all. "I just alleviated his position to eliminate some guilt, of course. We want to be careful about providing too much due process to the accused in this country."

Clark refused to speculate on what Watkins' status at HLS would be if he were acquitted of the criminal charges. "He's just refusing to speculate so he can satisfy his sexual palate," Watkins said. "Well, he's a very strange person," Watkins explained.

Package 'Lost' Or 'Misplaced'

by Dean George Falvy

Cambridge police and a bevy of F.B.I. agents combed the basement of Child Hall for six hours yesterday in search of a missing package, apparently without success.

A spokesperson for the F.B.I. declined to specify the contents of the package or to call it "lost." "We think 'misplaced,' is a more accurate term," she explained.

Confidential sources, however, told HLS TODAY that the package in question contained a nuclear weapon. "It was supposed to go to the Physics Lab on the other side of Oxford Street," the source said, chuckling nervously. "Somebody's going to pay for this."

Package room staff seemed unfazed — indeed, almost oblivious — to the commotion around them. When asked about the missing item, Sorter Emeritus Barney Retro said, "I don't see it anywhere on the shelf. Is your name on the list?"

"The window will be open again later in the afternoon, from 2:10 through 2:17 p.m.," Petro added. "Why don't you come back then?"

Investigators did stumble upon a hidden room full of packages with cancellation dates ranging back to the construction of the Gropius Complex in the 1950s. "They were really glad to see us," said one agent. "Most of them had given up hope of ever being delivered."

As usual, everthing Steve Donziger has written is wrong. Anyone who agrees with him is an idiot.

In particular, this proposal would cost too much.

Furthermore, it would be a step on the road to abolishing the privileged position of America's whit, male, hegemonic elite. Surely none of us want that.

This law school has been going downhill since the first papist was admitted. If we don't put a stop to it now, who will?

HLS Buzzwords

Students at HLS have developed a colorful lexicon to describe certain individuals and circumstances which refuse to be defined by standard language.

Facial: The act of putting someone in his or her place; a comeuppance. Usage: "Wow, Areeda really gave him a facial today."

Hark Hog: Someone who stands in front of his or her box at rush hour, reading every piece of mail, including statements from class marshall candidates.

The Supremes: The Supreme Court. Usage: "That case is going to the Supremes."

Penalty Killer: Student who asks an innocuous question just before the end of class to preempt introduction of a new topic.

Drag King/Queen: Student who asks an incredibly complicated and unnecessary question just before the end of class, resulting in everyone else getting out late.

'Pugn: From "impugn." To insult, especially in an embarrassing way. Usage: "That Wellesley babe really 'pugned him at the party last Friday."

Dropping the H-Bomb: Introducing the fact of one's attendance at HLS into casual conversation with a non-HLS person of the opposite sex.

Toast: Student who has been put on the spot at length about a case he or she did not read. Usage: "She was complete toast when Kaplow finished with her."

Lottery God/Goddess: Student who gets a room in Hastings, a parking space in the Everett Street garage, and Tribe for Con Law.

FENNA

It's Friday night and I'm going to Lincoln's Inn to get laid. My friends have all warned me that HLS guys don't like HLS gals, that Wellesley gals like us even less, and that there will be a lot of hostility directed my way - but I'll give it my best shot.

I'm wearing my shortest, tightest black dress as I make my grand entrance. Just because I have half a brain, guys, doesn't mean I don't have hormonal urges.

As soon as I arrive the HLS guys flock to my side. "Wow, FENNA's so articulate!" they are thinking. "I'd really like to get to know and cherish her. I hope we can be friends."

This is not working. Why are we spending all this time making strict liability efficiency arguments when we could be doing the wild thing? Why can't they respect me for my sexual wizardry, and not my steel trap mind? I am not a law student, I am an ANIMAL!

So I try being a little more direct. "Well, yes," I say to the absolutely dreamy 2L closest to my side, "strict liability can promote social justice, but I think the real key to societal peace and understanding is individual happiness. Do you know what I mean?" They nod their heads. "I think it's really important to satisfy needs on a personal level. Only by working on attaining our own intellectual, physical, spiritual, emotional, and sexual harmony can we hope to make our world a better place. Here at HLS it's easy to coordinate the intellectual, physical, spiritual and emotional elements...but as for the other..."

"Oh, now I know exactly what you mean! I have a beautiful room with a private bath here at the Inn, and I just bought a new down comforter. Shall we go upstairs? I have a reserve of Moet-Chandon, we could take a champagne bath, spend a few hours towelling each other off and rubbing raspberry scented oil onto one another's naked bodies."

"Sounds great! We can take a few hours exploring each other's needs, and bring the night to its culmination in a frenzy of passion. Afterwards we can eat salmon mousse with bitter orange sauce...and with the leftovers..."

We smile wickedly at each other and race up the stairs. Paradise Found!

WE'RE NUMBER ONE!!!

We're Number One! A recent survey of service workers at the Quality Inn on Mass. Ave. in Cambridge has once again proven what we've known all along — WE'RE NUMBER ONE!

Dean Dark was buoyed by the survey. "The results are right on target. We are Number One. Those whackos at Yale can suck bulldog farts for all we care. We're Number One!" Dark added that the survey results have prompted him to raise next year's tuition to $34,999.95. "It's only fair. After all, we're Number One!"

NEW CLASS WILL HAVE GREATEST NUMBER OF HOMELY STUDENTS EVER.

By Care L. Huffen Hummer

Director of Admissions Joy CurledLip announced today that HLS Class of 1993 will have more homely students than in the past.

"We took a lot of crap for letting the Ford Modeling Agency do campus recruiting again this year," CurledLip said. Earlier this year there was a massive student rally protesting Ford's refusal to hire any of the 342 HLS students who interviewed for positions with the agency.

The protest started over and interviewing incident reported by Dirk Derek, 2L. Derek said one of the recruiters asked him what he would do if he was called a "dog" on a modeling shoot. Although Derek quickly replied, "Well, I'd expect it, I'm the HLS model," he said he felt violated and reported the incident to CurledLip.

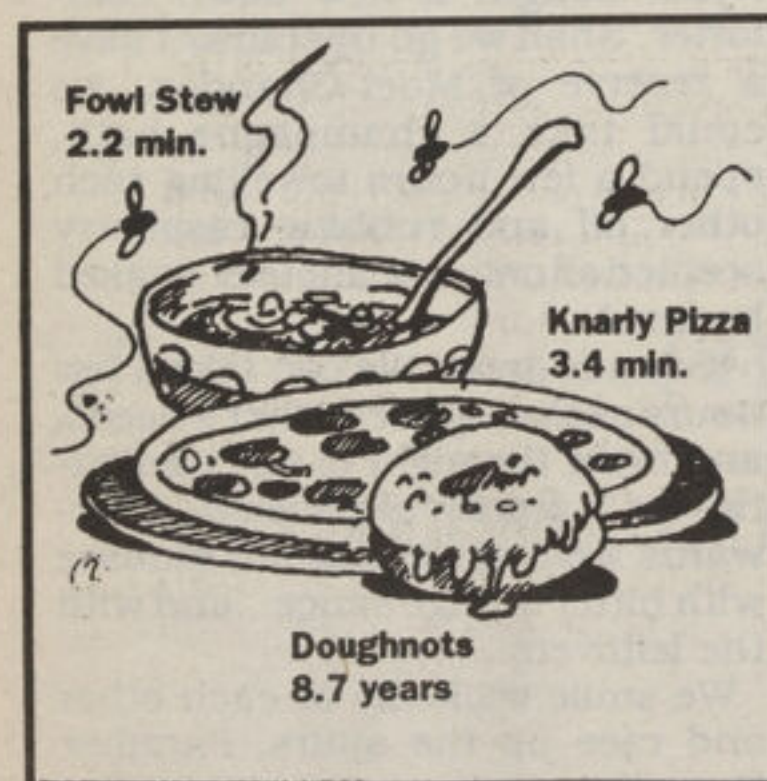

"We won't take this anymore," said CurledLip. "If they think we had dogs this year, just wait until they see next year's mutant crop." Insiders say CurledLip is still burning over the loss of Miss America to Yale Law School.

NEW FACULTY EXCHANGE PROGRAM WITH HASTY SLAW SCHOOL

Citing a need to get more people of color in the HLS faculty, Associate Dean Alka Seltzer announced a new faculty exchange program with the sunny Hasty Slaw School in California. "We will be sending five to 10 pasty-faced faculty members to Hasty every weekend October through March. We think this will go a long way towards meeting student demands for more faculty members of color." Hasty has a very nice Ocean Club, complete with the latest in European Tanning Bed technology. L.A. Law Arrives At HLS

STUDENTS TAKE THURSDAY EVENING OFF

By Crystel Warts

THE LARK - It's Thursday evening and to most of HLS's students, that means party time. It's the one evening they close their books early and "go a little crazy" at the Hark watching "LA Law," the favorite HLS pasttime. As Jane Smith, 2L, said, "LA Law takes precedence over everything from briefing contracts to Ames Competition."

"I've been coming to the Lark to watch LA Law ever since I can remember. I started watching it when I was in kindergarten, that's when I decided I wanted to be a lawyer when I grew up," Larry Lawson, 3L, said.

Asked what other social events he attended, Lawson said that, besides the St. Patrick's Day Party last weekend, he didn't really do anything.

To Lawson and many other HLS students like him, the show is there one "step back into reality" after a long week of torts and civil procedural rules. HLS TODAY estimates that over 92 percent of the HLS student body watch the show every week. Another 7 percent watch it at least three out of four times.

No one knows what would happen if NBC pulled LA Law. "I guess we'd just have to study more," Lawson said, "I know there's nothing else to do in Boston."

STUDENTS PROTEST LALAW RERUNS

Last fall, when LA Law was showing re-runs, HLS's students protested. Bert Mertle, 2L, who chaired the Mad About Reruns Committee (MARC), said "Students at HLS expect to see new shows weekly, we weren't about to let some rich producers on the west coast boss us around."

As part of the protest, MARC held a TV-in in the Hark for one evening, refusing to turn the TV on. They also, according to Mertle, held a referendum on campus, the results of which MARC sent to the President of NBC, protesting the re-runs.

"We thought a statement by HLS students that showing re-runs was unfair to the viewers who have seen the past shows would make an impact on their future decisions."

"It worked," according to Mertle, who said that days after the referendum results were sent out to California, new LA Law shows were back on the air.

Mertle said MARC, which has been inactive in the last few months, is gearing-up for next fall when they expect the problem might repeat itself.

"We're going to have posters and signs ready the next time they decide to show re-runs," Mertle said.

STUDENTS UPSET OVER THE LA LAW CROWDS

THE LIBRARY - Some of HLS's students aren't very happy about the crowds that "swarm the Hark" every Thursday night. HLS TODAY found a few of these who were willing to talk.

HLS's students who didn't like the LA Law crowds were those trying to study over the "noisy crowds."

"It's disgusting," one second-year male student said, "everytime I try to get to my Hark box on a Thursday evening, I have to walk over thousands of bodies."

On most nights, he said, "it's easy to stop at the Hark to get my mail on the way back from the library, but on Thursdays, the students who think they can party any time they want to, get in my way."

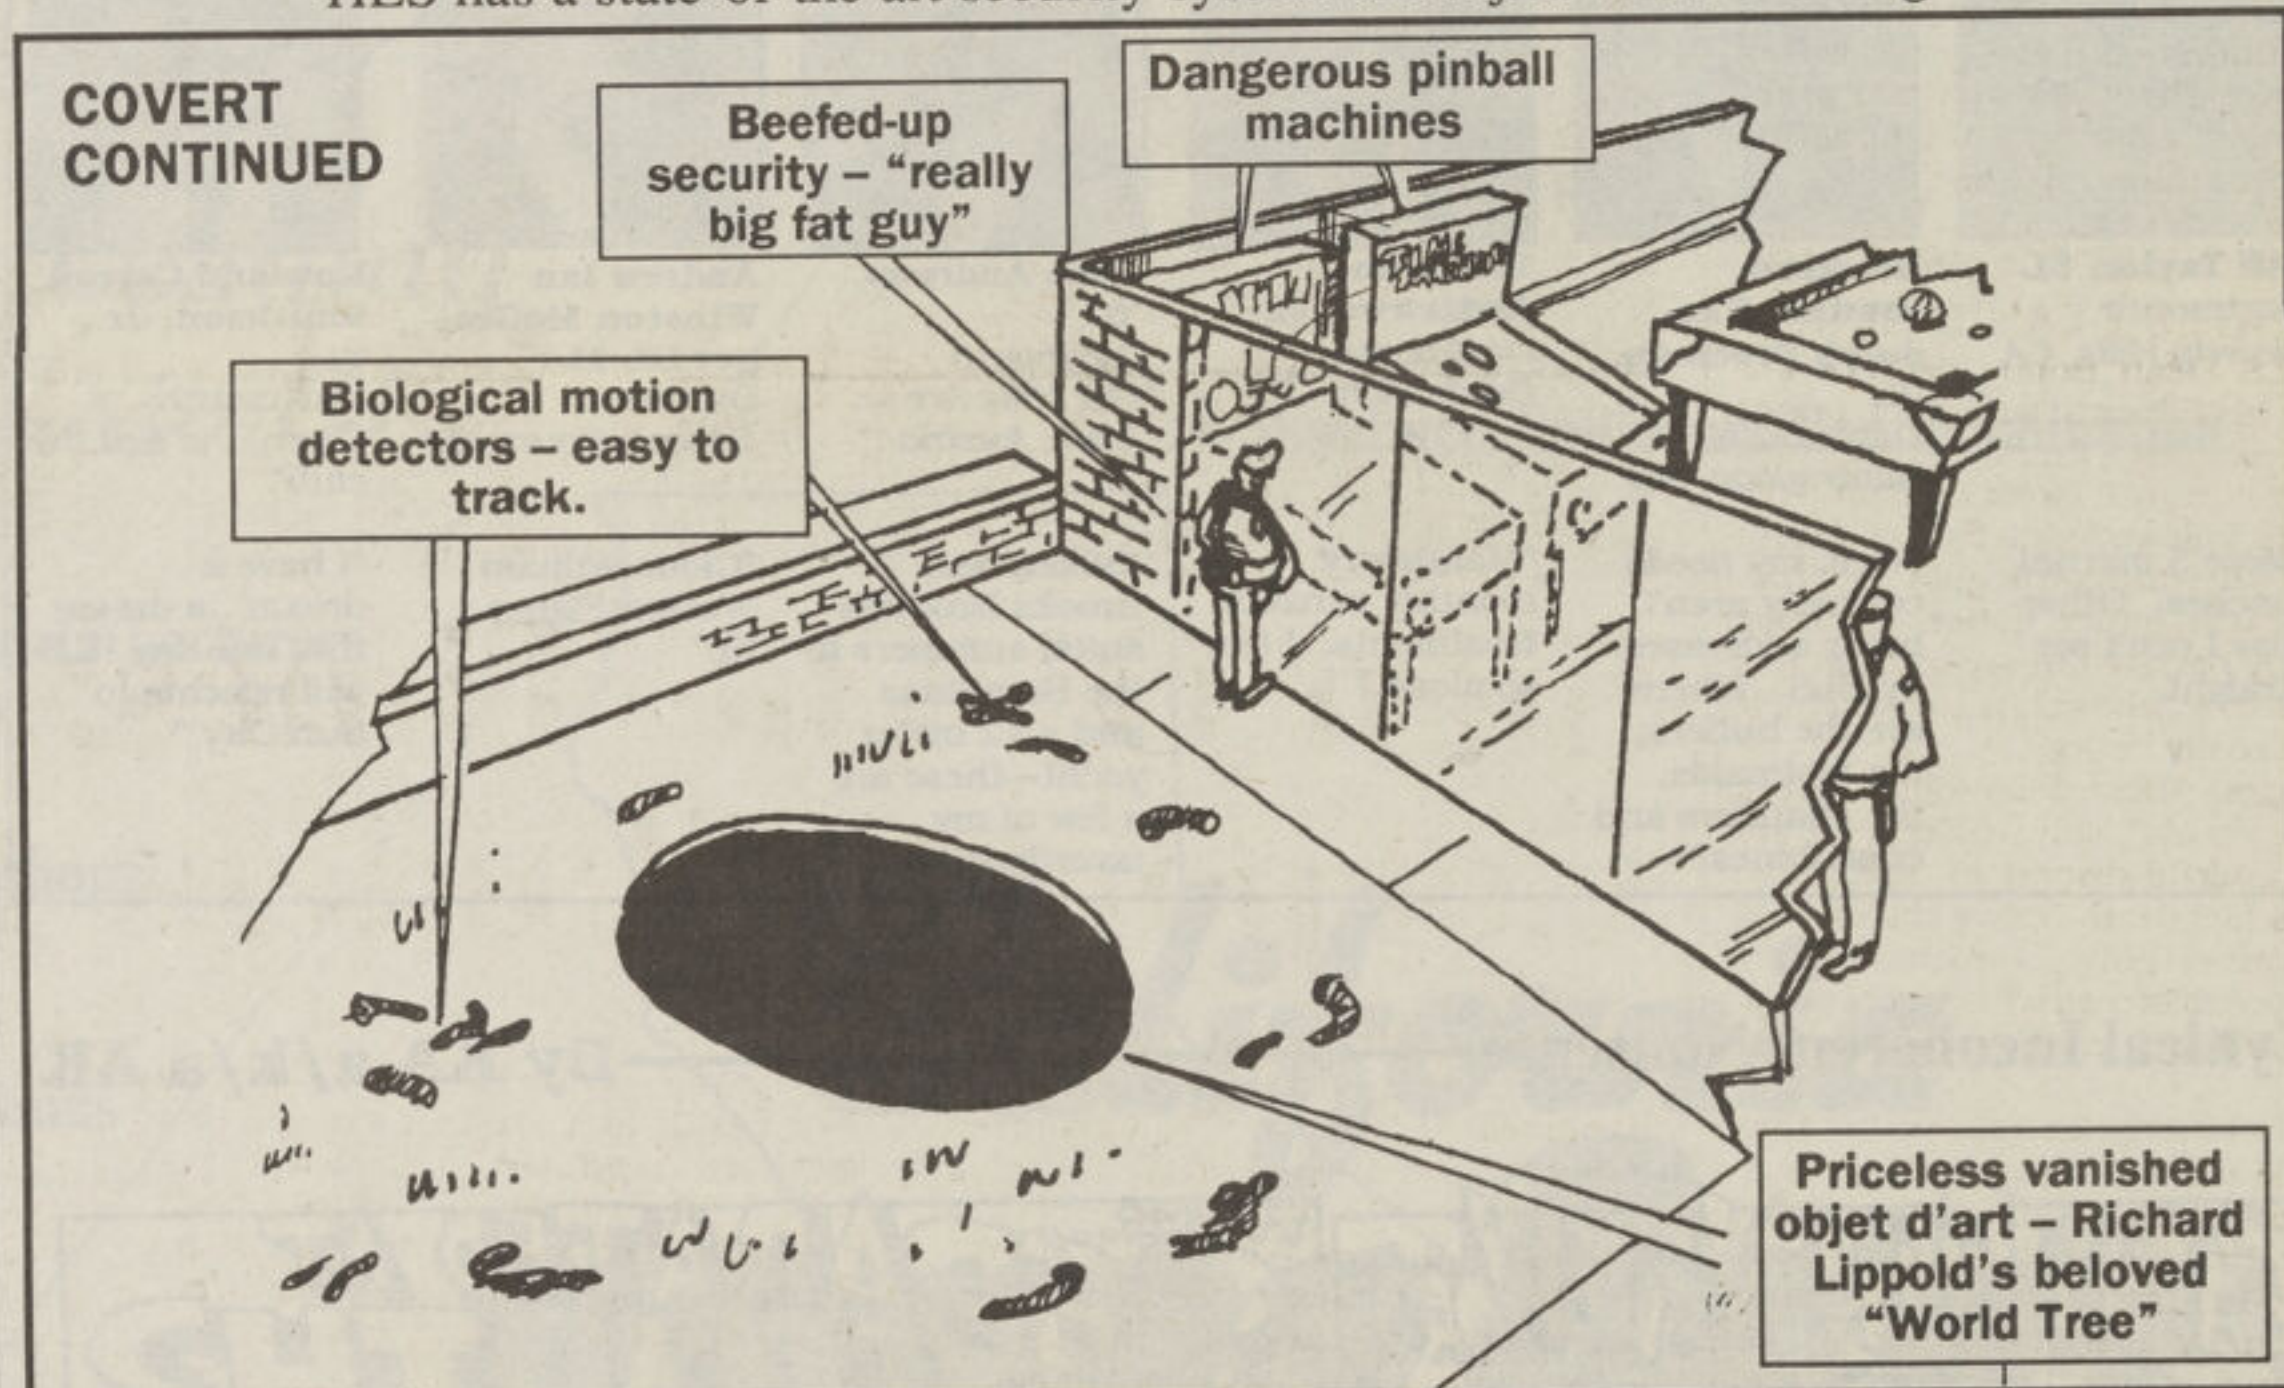

Other students had similar arguments. "I don't think HLS should even have a TV screen in the Hark, it's obviously a safety risk," said one woman, a third-year originally from Boston.

"LA Law isn't relative to anything a student does at HLS," she continued. She thought HLS's students should stay in their dormitory rooms if they insisted on watching the show.

Although a petition against LALaw has surfaced on campus, no one appeared concerned that LA Law would be banned from HLS.

How The Hark Was Protected

HLS has a state-of-the art security system but it just wasn't enough.

HLS Students Mourn Loss Of World Tree

quell a major disturbance at the pinball machines in the Hark, and thus had their backs to Jarvis Yard. "What's a cop supposed to do," LaDumbo queried, "just ignore that pinball riffraff scum? Have you ever seen a kid strung out on pinball? Not pretty, mister, not pretty."

LaDumbo noted that there are several theories for the theft. Among the possible motives:

♦ The theft may have been commissioned by a collector of HLS memorabilia. "You know how these students and alumni are — always trying to outdo each other with Harvard status items. As a matter of fact, we are currently investigating a '43 graduate who reportedly hired a 2L to steal Alan Dershowitz' nameplate from Dershowitz' office," LaDumbo stated that artifacts from the well-known legal wizard are considered practically valuable by collectors and that several unsolved murders are purportedly related to the quest for Dershowitz items.

"It's a status thing," said Forgerione. "The would-be collector is saying, 'I have everything else — a vegetarian lasagna sample plate from the Hark, an authentic linoleum tile lifted from the Pub during the great Pub Stench clean-up, the missing seat from the last row in Pound 101 — now, I want the World Tree."

♦ Although LaDumbo feels it unlikely, the thief could attempt to receive ransom in exchange for the return of the World Tree.

"Obviously, the Tree is too famous to be legally resold. It's just too hot to handle."

LaDumbo stated that he would personally object to any ransom payment. "I would personally object to any ransom payment," he noted. "Once you start paying blackmail, it's nothing but a form of blackmail."

♦ The World Tree could be resold in an international black market, catering to the very rich and to RICO criminals. Forgerione stated that the newest patrons in the black market are drug lords, Mafia bosses, and Phil Areeda, whose moonlighting activities put him in the same financial bracket as the others.

Students and faculty alike expressed sadness, shock, and outrage at the loss of the World Tree, which is widely regarded as a symbol of campus unity. Ironically, the void left by the theft has served to draw the HLS community even closer together, if that is possible. "We are going to tie yellow ribbons around every backpack, every barstool in the Pub, every seat in every classroom, in the hope that the bad guy will see we are sad, and give us back our Tree," sobbed Joyna Cause, 1L, outside of her criminal law class.

"Yeah," added Prof. Meltzer. "That robber [sic] shouldn't mess with our stuff. I'm pretty sure it's a crime, too."

Both Forgerione and LaDumbo are hoping for an early return of the World Tree, although LaDumbo said that no leads are currently being followed. LaDumbo also noted that campus security measures will again be increased, primarily by the implementation of exploding money devices in the Hark cash registers, and "some sticky, gooey stuff" that will make removing the highly-valued wooden cutouts from the Hark dining area walls more difficult.

HLS IMPLEMENTS NEW TUITION PAYMENT PLAN.

Starting in the fall of 1990, HLS's students will be able to pay their term bills with VandalCards.

Financial Aid Wizard Donna Brew said a new twenty-five foot VandalCard dispenser will be installed in front of Hastings Hall.

"Students coming to register in the fall will be able to purchase a VandalCard for $14,350.00. We have addressed our students' concerns by making VandalCards payable with nickels, dimes and quarters. Now every time they go to class there will be an automatic finger-printing machine activated by their VandalCards." Brew stressed that missed classes will not be refundable.

NOD PROTECTORS INSTALLED IN POUND 101

Thanks to a million dollar gift from Best Publishing Company, our 1Ls will soon have to stop worrying about catching an embarrassing case of "the Nods" in Pound 101.

The infamous classroom's squeaky swivel chairs will be outfitted with neural sensors underneath the green woven seat fabric. These sensors will automatically jolt a drowsy student with a three second nine volt shock.

ANOTHER CAPITALIST TOOL ALLEVIATES DEAN'S GUILT

Our HLS Dean Bobby deClerk announced his fifteenth $1 million public interest fellowship, funded by esteemed corporate citizen T. Bone Pick'em. This fellowship followed Our Dean's recent policy of alleviating his guilt for trodding over the entire notion of public interest by persuading a capitalist tool to sponsor a fellowship in which he does not really believe.

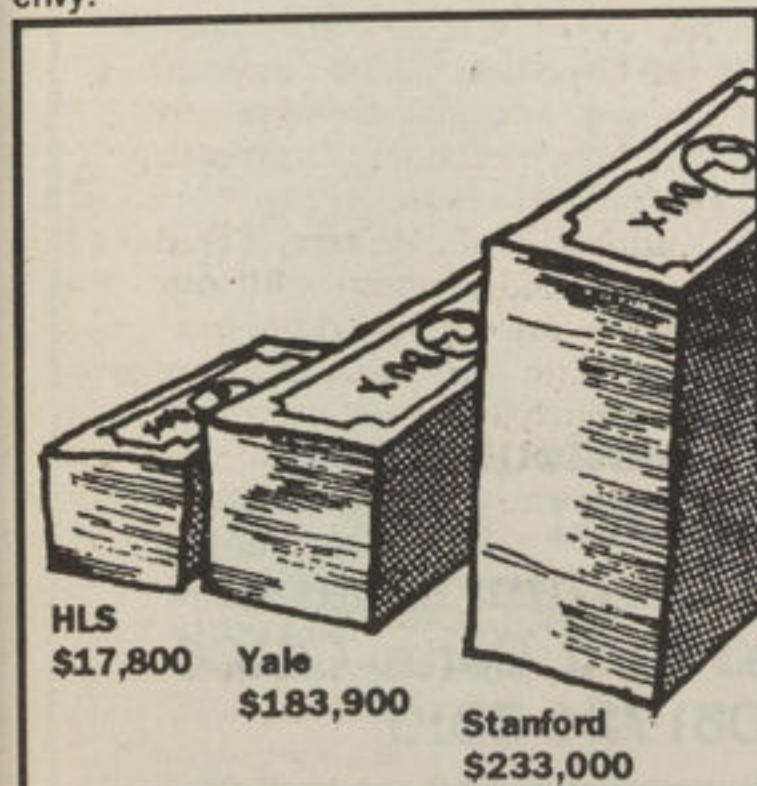

"Of course these fellowships are a complete crock," spit deClerk, in another masterful display of diplomacy, "but let's face it: they give me cannon fodder against the hypocritical students who cry socialist wolf while goose-stepping toward their cushy corporate firm jobs."

The scholarship, annointed the Gordon Gekko Any-Convenient-Liberal-Cause Fellowship will support any uncommitted left-wing cause, as long as no student actually joins the cause professionally after graduation.

"We can't believe the nerve of that bushy-faced, neo-Nazi, paste-eating, passion-vacuum agnostic," cried Hoary Walleye, full-time professional spokesman for ECIPIP. "If he thinks he can beat us at our own game, out-manipulating the press and the students, he's got another thing coming."

No New Tuition Increases

By Dream Gyorgyalvy
Special to HLS TODAY

GRISWOLD - (AE) - HLS Bean Counter Bob "The Price Is Right" Bark '72 mildly stunned the student body with the announcement of a sweeping user-fee plan designed to "stamp out free ridership and cross-subsidization" on the HLS campus.

Bean Bark outlined a series of measures to take effect next year, including a Hark box rental fee, toll bathrooms in the dorms, a comprehensive exam-grading and grade-pickup fee, and a tuition processing charge.

The proposal should have an immediate effect on academic life at HLS. Students who talk in class frequently will be required to reimburse their classmates for time consumed. Library bag searches will be taxed by volume. Students will pay to visit professors' office hours and to rent space for their on-campus interviews.

The Dark Pub was singled out as a particularly notorious example of insulation from market forces. The Bean proposed a 25 cent per-game surtax to insure against "the obvious risks" associated with pinball. Luxury boxes will be installed to cater to big-screen TV viewers, with special demand-sensitive rates during "LA Law" reruns.

The most radical element of the plan was a proposal to charge for the use of the underground tunnels connecting the main building of the HLS campus. "Students and faculty who prefer to walk outside in winter have been forced to pay for the luxury of these tunnels for too long," Bark said, using an overhead projector to display the relative costs per degree of temperature at HLS and four "sister" law schools.

According to the plan, subway turnstiles will be installed this summer at each tunnel entrance. Students may purchase tokens in rolls of 17 in the basement of Story Hall between 9:45 and 10:12 Saturday mornings.

Bean C. Bark explained that the fees were necessary to ensure that annual tuition increases could be kept under 15 percent. "It has long been said that you get out of your HLS education what you put into it," he added, "now we're just making sure it shows up on your term bill."

Sign O' The Times: Nadir's Corporate Raiders Debuts

Proudly boasting that the "greed is good" and that Ivan Boesky should be pardoned, Rolf Nadir, ??, announced today the formation of a new watchdog group, Nadir's Corporate Raiders. The purpose of the group will be to "protect corporate and other entrenched interests against the marauding middle and lower class peasants," according to Nadir. "Those lowly dirtbags have clearly outgrown their britches, trying to assert their measly rights, and need to be taught the meaning of respect," he crowed.

The group will be financed strictly by junk bonds and Student Funded Fellowships. Its primary purpose will be to defend the captains of industry from frivolous attacks by left-wing environmentalists and shamelessly self-serving consumer protection groups.

The strategy of the Nineties for the socially conscious students will be to "get filthy rich by sucking the hand that feeds you, grabbing power, and manipulating the white-male corporate hegemony until you are in a position of power where you can make changes" explained Nadir. Then, he added, once firmly ensconced in the Establishment, accept the fact that you worked hard to get there, and that the system really wasn't as bad as you thought back when you were a naive student.

"In other words," Nadir exulted, "let's quit kidding ourselves and let life imitate life!"

LSC Plan Will Cut Tuition In Half

A plan adopted by the Lawless Students Council (LSC) will cut tuition in half to less than $8000. Under the plan we will hire several dozen more faculty, build at least one new dorm, and make financial aid available to 30-year-olds who previously could not receive financial because of their "dependency" status.

Income for the tuition-cut plan will come from new pinball machines all over campus, and slashing faculty salaries to current federal minimum wage levels.

However, "there are obvious dangers in relying on pinball income," according to Administrative Dean Hormone Rigor.

Dean Cluck happily reported that he will adopt the LSC plan if LSC members are willing to teach smaller classes, build the new dorms, and donate the financial aid themselves.

Cluck's statement confirmed HLS' new policy of "student self-reliance" that began with the Somerville shuttle, where LSC volunteers agreed to pull rickshaws. In a similar move, the old pre-registration system will be replaced as soon as LSC volunteers fill out 1200 forms to test the new system.

Not all students like the tuition cut. Some complained that they were not consulted before the plan was adopted. "There needs to be a referendum about any issue this important," said LSC member Chris Coatimundi. Jack Apathy, 1L, who has never heard of LSC, agreed: "I get my news from HLS TODAY and I never heard a word about it. How dare the LSC try to improve the quality of my life without calling me?"

In protest, Apathy said he would continue paying tuition at the current rate until his questions were answered.

Charlick Jabberman, president of the Dormitory Slime and Crap (DSAC), saw the tuition cut in much more political terms. "It's a power grab, pure and simple," complained Jabberman. "Pinball is a DSAC issue, LSC should just keep off our turf."

Meanwhile, LSC is planning elections of a new President and Council. The LSC spent 12 hours at its last meeting debating a motion to change the title of the President to "Pooh-Bah for Life," which would have canceled the Presidential election and kept five-term incumbent Brawn Mettleless, 5L, in office indefinitely. LSC member Gordon Panthony agreed that "a sucker like Mettleless is a rare opportunity."

SHEPARDIZING OLYMPICS TO BE HELD THIS WEEKEND IN THE-MANWAY

By George Paul John Ringo

Besppectacled nerds will invade our own He-Manway Gym this weekend, scaring away all the Beach Gods and Goddesses who usually make He-Manway their home. The nerds will take part of the 131st annual Shepardizing Olympics, sponsored in part by our Bored of Student Sun Visors.

The nerds will begin the competition with a timed obstacle course around the quash courts, where they will have to Shepardize the Thorns Case and Shelley's Case while holding Gold, Red and White covered supplements between their knees.

The final event will feature Shepardizing under a Strobe Light while maintaining balance on our sand covered gymnasium floor.

STRICT LYCRA LIABILITY SUIT FILED BY HE-MANWAY AEROBICIZERS

by Linda Ropetoy

A group of HLS aerobicizers have filed suit in Federal District Court against all inventors, manufacturers, distributors, and sellers of Lycra products past, present and future.

The complaint stated that HLS aerobicizers have been the victims of intentionally inflicted emotional distress at the hands of the Lycra and aerobics industry.

"I can't go to class anymore, I'm addicted, I have insatiable Lycra longings. I haven't cracked a book this semester and if this were any law school other than HLS, I would flunk out," said Dyen Trushow, 3L.

The complaint seeks damages in excess of $6.78 billion, approximately one cent for every fat cell traumatized by the scurrilous industry onslaught.

SOMERVILLE A FAVORITE SPRING BREAK DESTINATION.

Over two-thirds of HLS students polled said their spring break plans included Fun Jet Weekend Get-a-Way vacation packages to Somerville. For the low, low price of $49.99, students were able to spend two days and one night at the Geisha Girl motel in Somerville. Included in the price is two delivered pepperoni pizzas and local transportation provided by our own HLS Cushman maintenance carts.

"I didn't think I could swing it," said Egg Sorbet, 3.5L, "but the Financial Aid Office came through with a comprehensive loan package. I had the time of my life. The recreational activities are phenomenal. I haven't spent so much time weight-lifting in years." Sorbet said 12 ounce weights were a favorite.

BUSINESS SCHOOL TRADES GYM TO LAW SCHOOL

By Jelly Concorde

The Bee-School agreed to trade gyms with HLS for two-weeks as part of a new Bee-School program, "What's its like to bee poor."

"Basically, we felt that a lot of students were graduating from the Bee-School without realizing the conditions that some people were forced to live under," said Prissy Staid, one of the initiators of the program.

The exchange, which will last for one week, will give the law students a chance to use the new facilities at the Bee-School which have been off-limits to HLS since they opened last fall.

Dean Simone 'Pinball Wizard' Rigorous Wins HLS Competition

By Dredge Dingbens

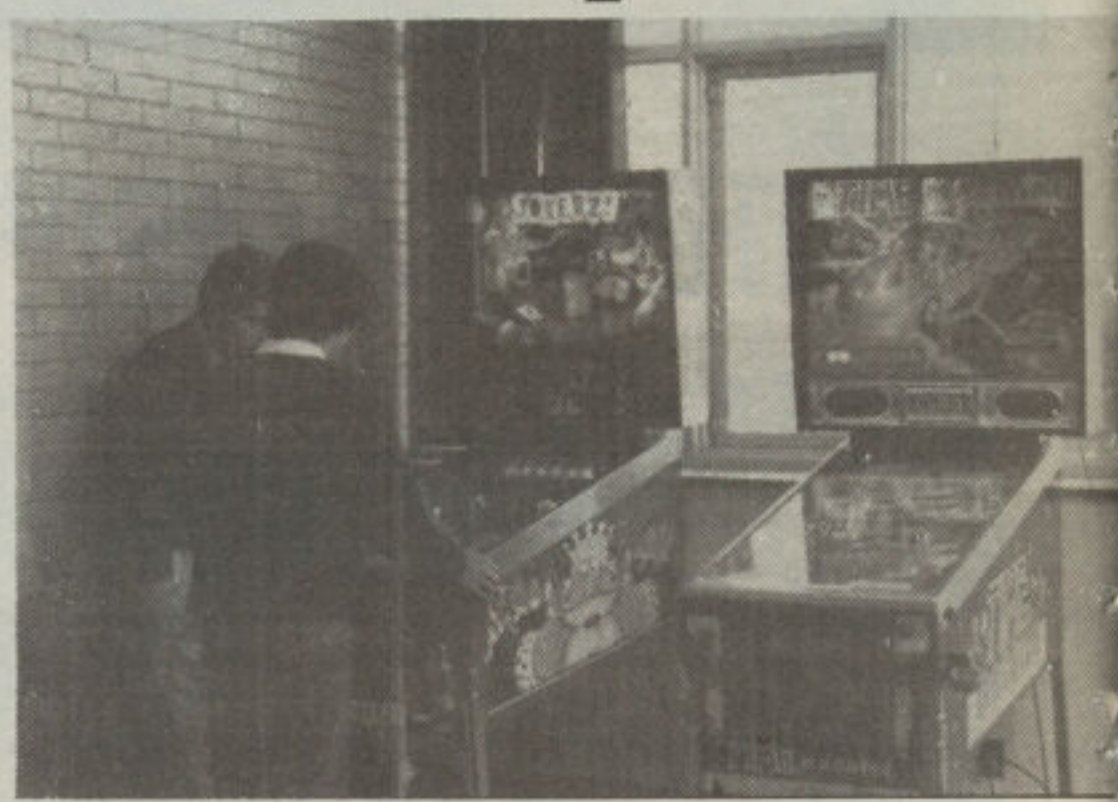

DARK PUB — In a stunning display of mental fortitude and physical dexterity, Administrative Dean Seemoan Rigorous severely whipped a host of riff-raff competitors before a frenzied crowd of beer-swilling fans in the Hark Pub to run away with our first annual HLS Pinball Tournament of Champions.

"This tourney means so much to me because I think pinball represents all that HLS as an institution stands for," gushed Rigorous, flushed with excitement from her big win and panting from exertion. "I mean, where else can you embody adversarial, head-to-head competition where quick thinking on your feet is so important?"

Her opponents agreed. "I came here 'cause my ol' lady threw me out of the house," explained the runner-up in the contest, Tommy, a freshman at Cambridge Rindge & Latin High School. Tommy was later arrested by HUPD for allegedly robbing the Hark Coffee House and leaving spray-painted symbols purported to represent a local drug-smuggling gang, the Crits.

Unfortunately, the contest was marred by a near riot precipitated when one participant allegedly ground his cigarette butt out in the forehead of a spectator. The HUPD reported that seven people were injured and eleven arrested as a result of the melee, and that two handguns, four switch-blade knives, six grams of cocaine, ten ounces of marijuana and a Supreme Court Reporter Digest were confiscated.

"It's unfortunate that jerk couldn't find an ashtray. But then again," Rigorous added cheerfully about the extracurricular action, "it's all part of the great tradition of the game and I love the excitement despite the obvious risk."

Sex-For-Grades Oral Agreements: Should UCC Section 1-208 Apply?

By K.O. Hummenhuffer

Amid a flurry of protests in response to the Emergency Coalition Protesting Impotent Professors (ECPIP)'s "Report on the Disparate Impact of Sex-for-Grades Policies at Harvard Law," many have called for shields to protect students from the vagaries of professors making Sex-for-Grades oral agreements and subsequently performing with lack of good faith.

ECPIP is overlooking the big picture. HLS has slid fairly far down a slippery slope. In a U.S. News & World Report article, HLS limped in as only the fifth best law school in the country a drop from last year's Number One position. A large reason was HLS's dismal 145th place ranking in the Sex-for-Grades category. Only 33 percent of all HLS graduates had ever used the service in the course of obtaining a J.D. In the "Sex-for-Sex" category, HLS fared even worse, placing second to last among all law schools surveyed. Only the University of Chicago Law School received a lower rating (which was balanced by its Best in the Nation ranking in the Law-as-Economics category).

HLS needs action, and it needs it now. More intimate classrooms with fewer students in them, more TA-ing, round-the-clock office hours. The Dean made a move in the right direction last spring by eliminating all air conditioning units in campus buildings (crucial during the warm and damp season), and by scoring a $1,000,000 cash payment from Frederick's of Hollywood for the Strict Lingerie Liability Fellowship.

It is not enough. HLS can never hope to return to its dominant position while it lags behind the likes of ECPIP. They're too soft. We need to get a leg up on the competition, and we need to get it up now!
